Description	Very little remains of Kyle Castle, and there seems to be no trace of its history. It is situated on a tongue of land near the junction of the Gelt and Glenmore Waters. NSA 1845 (J Chrystal): J Paterson 1863 There are only scant remains of Kyle Castle, a rectangular keep which has measured 14.0m x 7.0m externally. A fragment of wall, 6.1m long, 5.5m high and 1.8, thick, forms the N side of the keep, while the remaining walls are a mass of earth and stone. The wall is of ashlar masonry - typical construction of a 15th - 16th c keep. It is situated on a flat-topped spur which may have had a surrounding courtyard wall as vague mounds appear here and there on the edge. On the W extremity, there is a narrow 'covered way' which curved up to the keep; this may be a later construction. Visited by OS (JLD) 30 November 1955 Kyle Castle: name verified. The remains are generally as described by OS (JLD). The level promontory area W of the castle was almost certainly utilised as a courtyard; no perimeter wall base is evident, but edge revetting stones occur along the N and S sides, and a lower terrace has been created by an artificial N-S scarp, 1.2 m high, at the W end the promontory. The turf-covered footings of two rectangular structures occur at NS 6473 1921 and NS 6468 1921, the latter, about 6 by 3.5 m; these are possibly late in origin.

Description	An extensive area of quarries (MS 738/4), exploiting a narrow band of limestone of Late 18th to early 19th century. An extensive quarry and mine, with a range of kilns consisting of a pair of single-draw kilns and a double-arched, single-draw kiln of earlier date. Old Red Sandstone age that outcrops between Glen (NS 658 149) and the N end of the Guelt Lime Works (NS 665 158), were recorded during a pre-afforestation survey by AOC (Scotland) Ltd. Within the survey area, the Craigdullyeart Lime Works (MS 738/4, no.1) has three draw kilns and evidence for extensive underground workings. A track brought coal from mines at Edge Hill along a track (NS61NW 15 and NS61SE 7). S of Craigdullyeart is a second major quarry (MS 738/4, no.7) where working is restricted to surface quarrying along a long face and lime was produced from a number of clamp kilns. This quarry had closed by the 1st ed of the OS 6-inch map (Ayrshire, sheet xlii, 1860). Several other small quarries (including MS 738/4, nos.2 and 3), buildings (MS 738/4, nos. 5 and 6) and a small area of rig (MS 738/4, no.8) lie within the area of the quarries. S Carter and M Dalland, AOC (Scotland) Ltd, 1993; NMRS MS 738/4

It has been under cultivation, and there is no trace of a surrounding ditch. This was the ancient seat of the Rosses, who settled at Ryehill about the end of the 12th century.

RCAHMS 1920, visited 1913; W D Simpson 1939

The motte is situated on the edge of terrace slopes overlooking the flood plain. There are 15.0m high natural slopes on the west side and elsewhere the slopes are up to 3.0m high. The sub-oval level top measuring 20.0m NW-SE by 17.0m shows evidence of rig cultivation. There is a small quantity of stone visible around the edge of the summit area and surface quarrying has disfigured the north side.

Description Canmore ID 101247 - 271770 611520

This section of the Deil's Dyke has been removed by open cast quarry works in the 1990s. Prior to the coal mining a series of section were excavated across this section of the dyke revealed that the dyke had been constructed by stripping the turves and B horizon on either side to form the bank. A core of turves was visible in some places. Medieval pottery was retrieved from the bank core providing a terminus date for the bank around the 12th century AD.

(Area approximately NS 720 122) A 'Roman' urn filled with human bones was found a few years before 1841 by a road-maker levelling down the sides of a gravel pit on a very small knoll about 200 yds W of Kirkconnel bridge. The urn was broken by the workman, and the bones were reduced to powder on exposure to the air.

Description	https://canmore.org.uk/site/45516/ Iron Age to 19th Century

NS 730118. A circular stockade enclosing about half an acre was discovered when the surface of a meadow on Kelloside farm was being cleared for mowing about 1877. Stakes 3ft long and 6 ins in diameter had been placed upright in a trench and secured by wattles driven through mortice holes about 1ft from the bottom of each (see NS71SE 6 for Iron Age crannog where the woodwork shows a striking resemblance). The stakes were quite fresh in mossy ground, but following the circle of the stockade into hard ground no wood remained.

Air photographs (CPE Scot 324: 4407-8) show ground surface discoloration in the area.

J R Wilson 1898; J G Callander 1925; R W Feachem 1956

Much of the land around Kelloside Farm is low lying, and it was not possible to deduce a likely siting. There is no local tradition of the site and enquiries at Kelloside were unproductive. The siting reference of Feachem cannot be substantiated.

Description	https://canmore.org.uk/site/45517/

On Rig Farm is a field known as Libry Park, where there was a hospital for lepers: "Libry means the abode of lepers".

T Wilson and W McMillan 1931

Nothing was seen during recording to substantiate the suggestion of a leper house here. Building detail is shown at Libbry on Pont's map (too small to site) of 1612, and there was at one time, apparently a Libry farm, now gone.

J Blaeu 1662; Name Book 1857

The large field (centred NS 715118) E of the burn is known as Libry Park. The leper colony is supposed to have stood about halfway up the field, where there is a level area (A Mowat, Rig Farm). At NS 71411175 the surface of the field, which slopes towards the N, has been scooped out to the S and banked up to the N, forming a level platform 70.0m by 70.0m. There are no surface indications of a building and no trace of worked stone in nearby dykes.

Visited by OS (JFC) 9 September 1954

The entire field known as Libry Park is under mature afforestation and the level platform cannot be identified.

Description	Early Medieval https://canmore.org.uk/site/45520/ Kirkconnel 8 (St Conal), Dumfriesshire, cross-base

Measurements: H 1.00m, W 0.76m, D 0.54m; socket L 0.43m, W 0.23m, D c 0.13m

Stone type:

Place of discovery: NS 7243 1238

Present location: inside Kirkconnel parish church (ID 45513) re-used as part of the font.

Evidence for discovery: found in 1897 in the north boundary wall of the glebe west of the manse and taken into the church. By 1929 it had been incorporated into the support for the font.

Present condition: broad face C and much of faces A and D are thoroughly damaged.

Description

This quadrilateral cross-base is bipartite in form and only the lower part appears ever to have been ornamented. The socket could have held a substantial cross-shaft. The surviving faces of the base are carved in low relief within sunken rectangular panels with incised outlines. There are the remains of interlace on face A, and the basal loops of three vertical twists on face D (there would have been space for at least four loops in each twist). Face B has two double-loop designs one above the other, the top design with rounded loops and the lower with pointed loops.

Date range: tenth or eleventh century.

Description	https://canmore.org.uk/site/45495/

A typical example of an Iron Age crannog, the wooden platform, some 49 ft E-W by 40 ft, kept together by morticed beams and piles, was discovered when Black Loch was drained about 1860. A narrow curving causeway, supported by piles, connected the island with the shore. A dug-out canoe, 16ft long and tapering from 3ft to 1 ft 10 ins at the prow, was found in the mud. (This was decaying in a garden in Sanquhar in 1891).

A small whetstone found on the site is in Dumfries Museum, and a perforated flat stone, perhaps a sinker or loom weight (also in the museum) which "picked up on Sanquhar Moor" may have some connection with the site.

J Brown 1891; RCAHMS 1920, visited 1912; J G Callander 1925; G F Black 1894; A E Truckell 1966; Trans Dumfriesshire Galloway Natur Hist Antiq Soc 1942

NS 7970 1068. The crannog, dimensions approximately as described, survives as a mud-flat 0.5m above the water level. It retains no significant features apart from a possibly artificial inlet on its north side. No causeway is visible.

Mr J B Williams of Lochside, Sanquhar, found the partially perforated base of a bun quern at the side of Black Loch approximately 20 years ago. It is now in the front garden of Lochside (NS 794 102).

Visited by OS (JRL) 7 April 1978.

As the underwater component of Phase 2 of the South West Crannog Survey, the state of preservation of 14 crannog sites was evaluated in 12 lochs throughout Dumfries and Galloway as part of the Scottish Wetland Archaeology Programme (SWAP).

NS 7970 1068 Black Loch of Sanquhar (NS71SE 6). The crannog in this small peat bog loch measures 15 x 12m and is visible to a height of c 50cm above water. It is largely featureless other than a small cutting in the N side, which is probably the result of documented 19th-century antiquarian disturbance. Horizontal timbers were noted buried beneath the silt in two places. Three oak piles were noted on the E side of the mound.

Black Loch of Sanquhar (Nith catchment): location cited as NS 7970 1068.

The existence of this crannog was reported in 1863, when the loch was drained. It was then described as a wooden platform held together held together by mortised beams and piles. The discovery of two logboats [logboat: NS NS71SE 34] is also recorded in the loch.

The remains of this crannog were surveyed in July 2002 during the 2nd phase of the South-West Scotland Crannog Survey, with the intention of establishing an effective system of monitoring the rate of organic decay. No underwater investigation was feasible in this case, and it was not considered suitable for continued monitoring.

This crannog is situated in the middle of a sedge and sphagnum bog, and was found to be difficult of access as the ground becomes very wet and boggy about 100m from the loch. The water depth was 0.5m to the top of very deep deposits; no firm bottom was discernible, and suspended sediment precluded in-water visibility.

The crannog survives as a peat island (measuring some 15m by 12m) about 0.5m above water level. It is featureless, apart from an artificial inlet on the N side; this was probably formed during the 19th century excavations, to record a section. Some stones are visible around the rim.

Underwater, the slopes down gently to 0.5m depth, and is covered with thick silt, which presumably protects the core of the crannog. Search underwater revealed firmly-embedded horizontal timbers in only two places some 4 or 5m from the NE edge of the mound. A group of three oak piles was located in situ some 1.5m off the Eastern edge of the mound, and may form part of the causeway noted in previous investigations. One of these piles was sampled for radiocarbon dating. [No radiocarbon results cited].

Description	https://canmore.org.uk/site/45424/ The RCAHMS note a group of some fifteen to twenty small cairns between 800 ft and 900 ft OD, on both sides of the Deil's Dyke (Lin 535) and close to it. Scott-Elliott, who quotes the RCAHMS as a sub-reference, describes some thirteen cairns, centred NS 797 057, 200 yds S of the Deil's Dyke and in the area between the Twenty-Shilling Burn and the one running down the slope 300 yds to the W. He notes that one cairn, 24 ft in diameter, stands on an oblong platform, 51 ft by 45 ft, levelled up from the surrounding ground, with its edge marked by large stones. No hut circles have been noted. RCAHMS 1920, visited 1913; J Scott-Elliott 1967 NS 7968 0564. The specific example mentioned by Scott-Elliott is a turf-covered round cairn situated at the south-west end of a low natural swelling on gentle north facing slopes. It measures 10.0m in overall diameter and is a maximum of 1.1m high on the south side. It is mutilated by stone robbing on its east side, and displays no special features. The set stones around the natural 'platform' appear largely fortuitous with large stones marking the edge of a disused trackway on the south side. Only sporadic and isolated examples of clearance cairns, typically 3-4m in sub-circular diameter and 0.5m high, were found in the area between Twentysilling and Merk Burns. The deer park of Sanquhar Castle (NS70NE 3) was enclosed by a high, dry-built, coursed rubble wall, of which the greater portion, though in ruins, remained in 1938 (a modern housing scheme now covers part of the line). The park was kept up after the castle was deserted, for in 1740-5 there are mentions of repairs to deer park walls, deer house, and dovecot.

According to Grose, in the lower part of the deer park, under the W front of the castle, were the gardens and a fishpond now ploughed away. South of the castle is another walled enclosure where, according to Grose, was the bowling green.

W D Simpson 1939; F Grose 1789; R C Reid 1934

The fragmentary remains of the deer park wall can be seen in several places sufficient to give a reasonably accurate indication to its original course (see 6" Record sheet). There is now no trace of the gardens and fishpond but a levelled area centred at NS 78600916 and measuring 60.0m NW-SE by 55.0m was probably the bowling green.

NS 78560940 to NS78370970: Incorporated in garden walls of housing estate, some fragments of the original wall remain.

NS 7837 0970 to NS 7798 0965: Modern mortared wall, no trace of original wall.

NS 7798 0965 to NS 7798 0932: Modern mortared wall; significant step in field levels with internal area rising sharply to meet wall line.

NS 7798 0932 to NS 7847 0898: Probably the original wall, dry built 2.1m high with mock castellated top.

NS 7847 0898 to NS 7852 0919: Modern mortared wall, no trace of original wall.

NS 7852 0919 to NS 7856 0940: No trace.

Description

NS52NE 1 5835 2952.

(NS 5834 2951) Cairn (NR)

OS 6" map (1958)

The round cairn on Blackside has been despoiled for the building of an Ordnance Survey triangulation station (shown in the centre of the cairn on OS 6" 1910). Both Smith and Childe note the presence of large stones, which may mark the sites of short cists.

V G Childe and A Graham 1943; J Smith 1895

This oval cairn measures 30.0m x 20.0m and has a maximum height (on NW) of 1.2m. It is composed of both small and large stones. There is no trace of a kerb or cists.

Visited by OS (JFC) 11 June 1954

NS 5835 2952 The partially grass-covered remains of a cairn measuring 28.0m east-west by 23.0m and surviving to a maximum height of 1.5m. There are two small modern shelters built upon the cairn but there is no trace of a kerb or cists.

Surveyed at 1:10 000.

Visited by OS (BS) 10 July 1978

Located 1.7km to the south-west of the Scheduled Glenn Carr Cairn (SM2469), both located atop Blackside Hill. Both possibly with view towards Dungavell Hill Cairn (SM2848), 10.9km to the north-east.

The Scheduled Ballochmyle Viaduct, rock carvings 280m NE of (SM4484) located 8.2km to the south-west.

Scheduled Cairn Table, two cairns (SM4631) located 15km to the south-west.
